ABSTRACT

Film SEMICOLON made in the form of a fiction film with a duration of 18 minutes, using a linear plot with a total scenes 13 scenes. The film tells the story of a man named Keegan who is traumatized when he sees events that provoke memories of his past. Keegan has a dark past, he was sexually abused by his own uncle. The cultivation of this theme aims to show Keegan's emotions when he remembers his past events and makes Keegan someone who is sensitive, doesn't socialize with other people, doesn't believe in himself and feels useless for others, Keegan also often feels hopeless about himself. The artist in realizing the fictional film SEMICOLON uses the concept of repression according to Sigmund Freud's theory and is supported by an acting method using Stanislavski's theory to show emotions in Keegan's character.

To realize the concept of repression with acting method in the film that the author has worked on, the author uses the theory of directing Gording Craig by having three indicators of achievement including by exemplifying the scene that will be played by the actor, providing opportunities for the actor to develop the scene and making comparisons to increase the appreciation of the actor in understanding character. Character repression is applied in several scenes in the film based on the boundaries that have been set by the author to show the difference in expression between Keegan's character and Naya's character. The limits that have been determined based on the indicators that the author made by applying two directing theories and one acting are suitable if combined and are able to show gestures to one of the main characters who are the objects in the author's film and also the achievements of the artist's concept.
